

Companies generally violate the Washington Consumer Protection Act if they injure your property (e.g., cause you to lose money) through a deceptive business act or practice that might interest other consumers, too. Companies cannot use business acts or practices which can deceive a consumer like you. But some do.

Sound Justice Law Group represents consumers who seek to hold companies accountable for deceptive business conduct. If you have lost money or otherwise been injured by deceptive business conduct, contact Sound Justice to schedule a consultation with an attorney.
