

Have you ever received an uninvited text message on your cellular telephone? Many companies use SMS and MMS text messages to communicate with consumers about products and services. However, these companies do not consider how these text messages can be annoying and also cost money for consumers to receive.

The federal Telephone Consumer Protection Act (TCPA) and state laws like the Washington Commercial Electronic Mail Act (CEMA) regulate how and when companies can send text messages to consumers. Consumers who receive text messages which violate these laws can recover an award of $500 or more for each text message received.

Sound Justice Law Group has extensive experience holding companies responsible for sending illegal text messages to consumers. If you receive an uninvited text message from a business, contact Sound Justice today to find out more about your rights and remedies.